A new exhibition at Hackney Museum explores the Stamford Hill Mod movement; Peter Sugar, Mark Feld and Miki Simmonds by the Grand Union Canal (above)

SOME people say that Stamford Hill was the birthplace of the Modernist movement – a forerunner of the early Mods.

Indeed, Marc Bolan of T-Rex fame grew up in the area, then known as Mark Feld, he changed his name at 18. The pop star's teenage years were documented by acclaimed photographer Don McCullin in 1960. Now Hackney Museum is putting on an exhibition which features his iconic images and explores the development of the Mod movement. 'Stamford Hill Mods: The Genesis of Marc Bolan' tells the story of early modernist culture, fashion and music in Hackney in the 1960s. The free exhibition opens on 7 November. See pages 6-7 for more info and pics.

Big drop in street drinking

Street drinking and anti-social behaviour in Hackney has decreased by nearly 90 per cent in two years; Chief Inspector Andy Walker (inset)

REPORTS of anti-social behaviour relating to street drinking in Hackney have fallen by nearly 90 per cent over the last two years.

The dramatic drop follows the introduction of a borough-wide Controlled Drinking Zone, which gives the police the power to confiscate alcohol, or require people to stop drinking in streets, parks and public open spaces.

The order came into force in May 2010, following a public consultation.

The impact of the order is carefully monitored by a forum which includes representatives from outreach and support services, as well as the police and the Council's anti-social behaviour team.

Between May 2009 and May 2010, the police received 609 calls relating to street drinking. In the same period between 2011 and 2012, they received just 64.

Calls to the Council have dropped by a similar level.

The scheme has also proved successful in referring persistent street drinkers for treatment.

The Council and police are continuing to focus on hotspots in the borough, including Gillett Square in Dalston, and have formed a joint action group to tackle issues around street drinking and other anti-social behaviour in the area.

“The areas residents told us were ‘hotspots’...have reported big drops in anti-social behaviour”

Cllr Sophie Linden, Cabinet Member for Crime, said: “This sort of anti-social behaviour can make life really difficult for residents. It’s good that we have made such a difference and have been able to offer support to street drinkers.

“We’ve still got work to do and we’re listening to residents about where to focus our efforts.

“The areas residents told us were ‘hotspots’ when we launched the scheme have reported big drops in anti-social behaviour and we’re determined to make a difference in other problem areas.

“One of the most pleasing results is that, rather than issuing fixed penalties to those who can’t afford to pay them, the police and wardens have been confiscating alcohol and helping them to seek professional help. This has proved effective and the results speak for themselves.”

Chief Inspector Andy Walker from Hackney police, added: “The use of the controlled drinking legislation allows us to intervene early to prevent violence and disorder and we are really pleased with the results so far.”

KEY FACT

Graeae theatre wins award

DISABILITY theatre company Graeae has won a top industry award for its promotion of diversity in the arts.

The Kingsland Road creative hub picked up a Theatrical Management Association (TMA) award for its production 'Reasons To Be Cheerful', a coming-of-age tale that celebrates the music of Ian Dury and the Blockheads.

The show toured seven UK venues, including Hackney Empire, and the company's director Jenny Sealey visited theatres to help them improve access. In addition, she co-directed the London 2012 Paralympic opening ceremony, featuring more than 3,000 performers; Sir Ian McKellen; a rare appearance from physicist Stephen Hawking; and musicians from the 'Reasons To Be Cheerful' show.

Jenny said: "Graeae has had the most extraordinarily diverse year artistically and worked with many casts and creative teams.

It is brilliant that this has been recognised by the wider theatre industry."

She added that the Paralympics opening ceremony was the 'hardest thing I have ever done, but I

Graeae has had the most extraordinarily diverse year artistically am aware how lucky I was'.

A highlight for Jenny was watching 44 diverse deaf and disabled people with little circus skills develop into high-flying performers.

She said: "The group was made up of artists, former servicemen and Paralympians. I loved seeing them develop skills in trapeze, rope and hoop work and sway poles, and being there to support them when there were tears of frustration because the training was so tough.

"They did it though and I now have a huge team to work with in future projects and the most awesome and dedicated volunteers."

Jenny is determined to keep disability high on the public agenda, adding: "We have to continue to inform, challenge and advocate through our workshops and through our eclectic and diverse productions."

LONDON 2012 gold medallists Mo Farah and Jody Cundy are among the amateur photographers to have donated pictures to raise money for an HIV charity.

Positive East has been delivering HIV services in East London for 25 years. On 7 November it will be putting on an Instagram photo auction at Hoxton Apprentice. Proceeds from the sale go towards supporting the charity's work. Director Mark Santos said: "The demand for Positive East's services in our community has never been greater, and with strains on our resources at the moment, we are delighted that Instagramers London and our supporters have come together to put this wonderful event on."

Hoxton ward councillor Carole Williams, who helped organise the auction, added: "I wanted to do something to remember my friend Barry, who was the first person I knew who was HIV positive. When he was alive he didn't have the sort of services that Positive East offers. Now I can do my bit to help raise the funds they need in order to deliver the support, help and advice that wasn't available back then."

The auction, which is free to enter, takes place on 7 November at Hoxton Apprentice, 16 Hoxton Square, N1 6NT. For more on Positive East, call: 020 7791 2855; or visit: www.positiveeast.org.uk

The Mayor of Hackney officially opens five new Young Hackney centres which offered an array of half-term activities including gardening, wheelchair basketball, painting, rock climbing and computer sessions

A WEEK-long celebration to mark the official opening of five new Young Hackney centres began on 27 October, with hundreds of families and young people dropping in to find out what's on offer.

The five centres cost around £6.5million and were funded through the Myplace initiative and by the Council.

A group of young people helped put the funding bid together and went on to contribute to the design process for the centres.

The bid said they wanted to get young people off the streets and into youth centres; change the negative perception of young people in the borough; and achieve a mind shift in young people.

Each centre has its own speciality, to enable young people to nurture their talents. Hoxton Hall in Shoreditch focuses on the arts; Concorde in Homerton specialises in sports;

Woodberry Down is an enterprise centre; and the Stoke Newington centre in Milton Gardens focuses on IT and media.

The week-long opening festival, offered young people an array of taster sessions. Speaking at the launch at the Forest Road centre, Cllr Rita Krishna, Cabinet Member for Children's Services, said: "This week is just a taster of what's to come – there's something for everyone, so there's absolutely no excuse for young people in Hackney to say they're bored."

The Mayor of Hackney helped young people plant a time capsule to mark the occasion. It contained a Times newspaper dated 27 October 2012; a copy of Hackney Today; art work and poems by young people and statements from the public, reflecting their current thoughts and feelings. It is set to be excavated in 10 years' time.

The centres aim to be safe and welcoming places for young people to go, where they can access high quality, structured youth activities throughout the week, including sports, media, arts and drama, cooking, life skills, and the Duke of Edinburgh Award scheme.

HACKNEY parents have shown a real passion for contributing to improving maternity services in the borough.

Over 150 residents responded to the 'Maternity Matters' campaign, launched last month by the Council, in partnership with City & Hackney NHS, to recruit parent representatives to the area's Maternity Services Liaison Committee (MSLC).

This is a group which includes mothers, midwives, doctors and other health professionals who come together to help shape maternity services that meet the needs of local women, parents and families.

The aim was to recruit five to 10 MSLC members who would represent the diversity of Hackney and provide a voice for maternity service users. The response was overwhelming, with over 150 residents applying through the Maternity Matters website, and many attending an informal drop-in event at the Ann Taylor Children's Centre on 31 October to register and share their experiences.

“It's good that people have noticed that feedback from mothers is important”

With light refreshments, crèche facilities and face painting available, the event gave potential reps a chance to ask questions while their children were entertained.

Attendee Sherees Fisher said: “It's good that people have noticed that feedback from mothers is really important.”

The final selection of parent representatives will take place over the next few weeks. There will also be other opportunities for those not selected to continue to support the campaign.

Grants for voluntary sector

A SMALL grants programme has been launched by the Council to support voluntary and community sector (VCS) organisations in the borough. These include promoting work opportunities; raising educational achievement and aspirations; promoting health, well-being and independent living; making Hackney safer; developing good neighbourhoods; and supporting sustainability. Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Health, Social Care and Culture, said: “These grants are targeted at smaller community organisations to help assist with their ongoing work, special projects or events.” Last year, 75 organisations received a share of £2.5million from the Council's voluntary and community grants programme to deliver a range of projects. Deadline for applications is 5pm on 7 December. Funding is only available for projects starting from 1 April 2013 onwards. ### Radio project goes live on air

A RADIO programme featuring the words and wisdom of the borough's elders has hit the airways. Members of Hackney Homes' over 55 group took part in the show with presenter Rick Crust, from Age UK Hackney, leading them on a thought-provoking journey through time. Questions such as ‘who are you?’ and ‘where have you been?’ allowed the group to lay bare their emotions and use life experiences to provide guidance to listeners.

Prudence Smith said: “These are powerful sessions. We all have stories to tell that we haven't told our children, friends or anyone. This radio project allows us to share our experiences to help others.”

Leon Bonjo added: “This project is very interesting and it's great to hear different perspectives.”

The group will be debating, discussing, informing, educating and entertaining every week.

Modern age

A new exhibition at Hackney Museum explores the Stamford Hill Mod movement

A NEW exhibition exploring the Stamford Hill Mod movement in the 1960s is set to open at Hackney Museum on 7 November.

'Stamford Hill Mods: The Genesis of Marc Bolan' tells the story of early modernist culture, fashion and music in the area in the 1960s.

Fifty years ago, international war photographer Don McCullin took pictures of 15-year-old Mark Feld and friends in Stamford Hill for 'Town Magazine'. Three years later Feld changed his name to Marc Bolan and went on to find fame as the lead singer of T-Rex.

Miki Simmonds, who grew up in Stamford Hill and was one of the Mods pictured with Bolan, said: "It's the year 1960 and I'd just turned 18. We were full of energy, youth was eternal and life was yet to be, we thought we were going to live forever. We were Mods. Ace Faces. We were the Stamford Hill boys – this was our meeting place, our turf."

Visitors to the exhibition will find photographs, testimonies, early 45 vinyl records, Mod magazines and a copy of the original 'Town Magazine'.

There will also be recorded memories of handmade suits and bum freezer jackets as well as the old Mod hang-outs, such as the ten pin bowling alley and the amusement arcade in Stamford Hill.

FACES WITHOUT SHADOWS

Mark Feld, Peter Sugar and Michael Simmonds were brought up in Stoke Newington. The most important thing in the world to them is their clothes; they have cupboards and shelves bulging with suits and shirts often designed by themselves in bright, strange and violent colours. In their vocabulary they, and the few other contemporaries of whom they approve, are described as 'faces' – the necessary ingredients are youth, a sharp eye for dressing, and a general lack of mercy towards the rest of the world.

Feld is 15 years old, and still at school. His family has just moved from Stamford Hill to a pre-fab out in Wembley. Of this he does not approve. The queues of Teds outside the cinemas in Wembley look just like a contest for the worst haircut, he says. At least the boys of old Stamford Hill dress sharply, and who would want a new, clean house if it is in unsympathetic surroundings? Nonetheless cleanliness is of vital importance to him. Shining with soap and brush, he is apparently tireless and often goes for days on end without any sleep; there is never a trace of fatigue or boredom in his face. What is the point of all this energy and all the soap and water? Where is the goal towards which he is obviously running as fast as his impossibly shod feet can carry him? It is nowhere. He is running to stay in the same place, and he knows that by the time he has reached his mid-thirties the exhausting race will be over and he will have lost. Living for the present is a mild way of putting it; for him and for all the other sharp young faces the present is so short and so intensely satisfying that they cannot give even a minute of their time to considering the future.

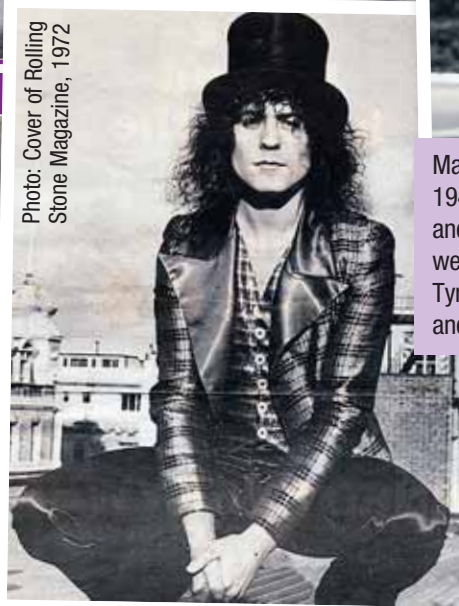

Leading this sort of life develops arrogance. It is naturally assumed that all girls must fall headlong in love when they meet a face; those that are not pretty enough or who fail to come up to scratch in some way are referred to as maggots by the boys and usually treated accordingly.

Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Health, Social Care and Culture, said: "Hackney's colourful Mod past has been brought to life by true tales from local people who grew up here in that time, or who were part of the scene. It's this type of engagement with communities in the borough which helps to bring the honest, informed and interactive exhibitions we see in Hackney Museum today.”

What a draw

Residents picked up their crayons to add a splash of colour to Hackney

A WORLDWIDE celebration of drawing came to Hackney last month as people of all ages showed off their artistic talents.

Dalston Square was awash with colour for the Big Draw on 6 October, when over 100 people covered the pavements outside Dalston CLR James Library with their art work.

Called 'Once Upon A Time In Dalston', the event featured drawing workshops for children that took inspiration from children's literature. Oscar Fichelson, four, who attended the event, said: "The drawings are good. The snake is my favourite because it has lots of colours. My shark is cool. It can shoot arrows out of its eyes. He is poisonous."

Dalston Square was also the scene of 'Making The Connection' – led by artist Julian Wild on 13

October – where young and old alike made communal sculptures out of plumbers' pipes and elbow joints.

Joel Belsham who attended the event with his son

Red, five, said: "This is a really good idea. A good, positive social event."

Tak Hoshino went with sons Yuki, eight and Kai, five. Kai said: "I think we should do this every week. We're not going home until the job is finished."

The Big Draw then moved on to Clissold House on 14 October, where young people were encouraged to design a 'big house' collage.

Richard Crawford, from Clissold Park User Group, said: "One child enjoyed drawing so much that he made five drawings."

"His carer remarked that he was not usually able to concentrate on a task for very long and that this represented a considerable achievement on his part."

SHARED OWNERSHIP DOESN'T MEAN HALF MEASURES

WOODBERRY PARK NORTH, HACKNEY N4

Shared home ownership is the smarter way to get on the property ladder – you choose a property you like, buy a share you can afford and pay a subsidised rent on the rest. You save substantially on renting a similar property privately and you can increase your share at any time all the way to 100%.

But buying your first home in manageable, affordable stages doesn't mean compromise. Ashview Apartments at Woodberry Park North in Hackney, for example, have fitted kitchens with stylish beech-effect fitted cupboards, contrasted with granite-effect finished worktops. Appliances include a multi-function Indesit electric oven and hob and stainless steel extractor hood. The bathrooms are contemporary in style with grey ceramic feature wall and floor tiling, and the living area features floor-to-ceiling windows designed to let in maximum daylight.

Woodberry Park North is part of the award-winning Woodberry Down regeneration scheme and is in Zone 2, approximately 10 minutes' walk from Manor House tube on the Piccadilly Line. From here Kings Cross St Pancras and its Eurostar services are just 10 minutes by tube while Oxford Circus and the West End is 15 minutes away.

Ahead of the game

WALKING into milliner Piers Atkinson's Hackney Downs studio is like entering one of Roald Dahl's fantastical sweet shops.

Shelves are stacked with boxes of brightly coloured ribbons, buttons glint like jewels, and rolls of soft fabrics line the drawers. But look a little closer and you'll find baskets brimming with vintage Barbie dolls, oversized exotic fruits and cuddly toys.

"I want women to put my hats on and feel fabulous," Piers explains, adding: "I'm not making hats to keep the rain off – I want people to put a hat on and feel good about themselves."

He describes his designs as 'whimsical, flamboyant, camp and fun', citing celebrities such as Paloma Faith, Lady Gaga, Rihanna and Tim Burton among his clients. But he also makes more restrained hats for landed gentry, royals and Ascot-goers, having twice made hats for princesses Eugene and Beatrice, most recently over the Queen's Jubilee weekend.

"We make some tame hats, we make some more medium ones and we make some show piece ones. We always wonder what we are going to sell," he says.

"I get inspiration from walking down the street in Hackney. Ridley Road market has kept me going for five years now"

Piers' work first found the spotlight at fellow milliner Stephen Jones' exhibition at the V&A Museum in 2009, called 'Hat: An anthology'.

He was included in the 'new milliner' section, alongside Noel Stewart, Justin Smith and Nasir Mazhar, which led to him getting featured in London Fashion Week and being approached by Fenwicks department store.

Indeed, it is little surprise that Piers fell into the hat making business because he comes from a long line of creative women. His mother was a milliner, his grandmother an artist, and his great-grandmother an Edwardian dressmaker.

"Creativity and ingenuity has been in this family for at least four generations – that's 125 years," he muses. "With my mother working for the English National Opera, the hats I grew up with were huge, theatrical feather-plumed numbers that were practically show girl hats. That is where my love of flamboyance came from."

As to where he gets his inspiration, Piers is clearly passionate about where he lives. He says: "I get inspiration from walking down the street in Hackney. Ridley Road market has kept me going for five years now. I love it down there – you see everything. Who knows what will come up there next time."

In fact, Piers has even made a hat dedicated to the area: the 'Dalston cap', which has a permanent archive space at the V&A. Other Hackney-inspired hats include the 'Dalston hat', with the word Dalston lit up in Hollywood-style writing, and the 'Lower Clapton' – which is a re-make of the original Dalston cap.

Piers says: "I live in Hackney, my studio is here and all my friends live here. I think Hackney is a real melting pot and a very broad-minded place to be. There's a real mix of cultures here and I find it a very vibrant place."

"It feels like there's room for growth, movement and innovation – it doesn't feel static or stale. Everything is happening here, isn't it? There's a boom in the creative industries, the Olympics and the new East London line. In terms of growth and change it feels very exciting."

Piers' Spring/Summer 2013 collection, 'Director's Cut,' which is inspired by Hollywood glamour, is out next month.

THE GREEN GENIE

All your green questions answered

Q: I've got a couple of pumpkins left over from a Halloween party and don't know what to do with them.

A: Every year in the UK we buy around a million pumpkins at Halloween. You can use the flesh to make a range of tasty treats including pumpkin pie, soup or even lasagne. There are plenty of recipes and other seasonal tips for reducing food waste at: www.lovefoodhatewaste.com. The Council will also dispose of the heavy outer shell. The average pumpkin weighs between 2-3kg, and if you put that in with the rubbish, you'll be sending tonnes of waste to landfill – which is harmful to the environment and costs a lot to process.

To reduce this waste and help the environment, the Council will collect your leftover pumpkins and turn them into compost to help fertilise the borough's parks and gardens. Leave the pumpkins by the side of your blue food waste caddy (or take them to the food waste collection point on your estate) and the Council will take them away.

Pump it up

Three car-shaped bike racks and heavy duty bike pumps have been installed in locations around Hackney

NEW cycle facilities have been opened across the borough in a bid to inspire discussions around cycling and alternatives to travelling by car.

Heavy duty public bike pumps have been installed, as well as three car-shaped bike racks at Wilton Way, Finsbury Park Road and Provost Street.

If the locations prove popular they will be replaced by permanent cycle parking and the bike racks will move on to new locations.

The racks take up the same space as a parked car and provide secure storage for up to 10 bicycles at a time. Residents are invited to suggest the next potential sites as the racks continue their journey around the borough.

Cllr Feryal Demirci, Cabinet Member for Neighbourhoods, said: "Cycling offers numerous health and environmental benefits and proves popular with residents – with more people cycling to work in Hackney than any other London borough."

"We'd like to provide more facilities for cyclists

“We'd like to provide more facilities for cyclists and we would like to hear about where we can locate new racks”

and we would like to hear from residents about where we can locate new bike racks, as we look to increasing the amount of parking for bicycles in the borough."

The bike pumps are free to use and feature a mobile phone QR code, which can be scanned to download a map of other pumps in 15 locations around London.

The bike pump map can be viewed at: www.cyclehoop.com/publicbikepump

School gardens given a makeover thanks to KPMG volunteers

A TEAM of 20 auditors from KPMG spent a day at The City Academy in Hackney helping maintain the grounds.

They visited the school to clear an overgrown plot, which is used by pupils and teachers for eco-projects.

After the school summer holidays, the garden had become a bit of a jungle. Team spirit was the only thing not to be dampened in the wet weather as they transformed the gardens into a tranquil place to relax.

Jessica Glass, KPMG team leader on the day, said: "Despite the cold, wet conditions the entire team really enjoyed the day away from their desks – and it was a fantastic opportunity to work together to do something nice for the students at the Academy.

"It was great to give something back, and we hope that the students and teachers will enjoy the gardens."

The team also donated gardening equipment and seeds to enable pupils to continue with the upkeep of their green space.

KPMG is a co-sponsor of The City Academy in Hackney, and staff regularly work with teachers and pupils as part of the firm's corporate social responsibility programme.

Top borough for recycling electrics

HACKNEY residents have recycled more electrical items than ever before this year, breaking the previous record for collections.

More than 1.3 tonnes of electrical goods were dropped off at sites around the borough in August, with the annual total now standing at 9.3 tonnes recycled this year – the most in North London.

Hackney has already surpassed the 8.4 tonnes it collected during 2011, keeping items out of landfill, which is more costly and environmentally damaging.

Cllr Feryal Demirci, Cabinet Member for Neighbourhoods, said: “So far this year residents have helped to reduce our environmental impact, taking old toasters, kettles, hairdryers and small electrical items to the various WEEE (waste electrical and electronic equipment) banks around the borough.

“When we replace old items we can still recycle parts from them, even if they are broken. This helps reduce the amounts we send to landfill each year and reach our targets for recycling electrical items.”

Anything that requires batteries or a plug to operate is classified as electrical or electronic. This is one of the fastest growing waste streams; around 1million tonnes of electrical items are thrown away in the UK every year.

Small electrical items such as kettles, irons, clocks, remote controls, games consoles and calculators are quite often discarded with household waste due to their small size, but can all be placed in on street WEEE recycling banks instead.

Free collections for larger electrical items can also be arranged, by calling: 0800 085 1050; or be taken to household waste recycling centres in Islington and Waltham Forest for recycling.

News in brief

Save money, reduce food waste

A TWO week challenge to help residents reduce food waste and save money has been launched.

Households across Hackney have been invited to take part in the North London ‘It Pays To Plan Challenge’, organised by the Council, North London Waste Authority (NLWA) and Waste Watch.

Food currently makes up almost 30 per cent of North London’s waste. The aims of the challenge is to demonstrate how little food waste households can produce over seven days when meals are planned, portions measured, and residents get creative with leftovers. The average North London household could save up to £50 per month just by wasting less food.

To take part, request a challenge pack from: www.nlwa.gov.uk/foodwaste. The first 100 residents to complete and return the pack will receive a food rescue pack full of helpful tips and tools for saving even more money.

Give mother nature a helping hand this Autumn.

Autumn leaves break down and provide nutrients for the ground. If you're clearing leaves and prunings and want to help turn your garden waste into compost, use your brown bin or bag to recycle your garden waste.

The People Wood

The Redmond Community Centre Kayani Avenue, N4 2HF

A CERAMIC 3D community art piece, inspired by data submitted by people in Stoke Newington and Manor Park, has been unveiled at The Redmond Community Centre.

Named 'The People Wood', it sees more than 350 mini tree models combined to create an image of the areas N4 and N16. Every tree figure has its own individual colour and contours reflecting each person involved in the project.

Originally, residents were asked to answer a series of questions about their connection to N4 and N16, such as how often they speak to their neighbours and to what extent they might give to others. Computer generated trees were then designed and printed to reflect the answers, and so creating a version of the respondents' personalities, said Andrew Merritt, founder of design firm Something and Son, which created the piece.

Andrew added: "We wanted to involve local people in the design and its culture. The feedback from the people has been good and they did seem to feel engaged." It is hoped 'infoscultures' such as these could also act as a new way of consulting residents on developments to their area. The piece was commissioned by Manor House Development Trust, a social enterprise aiming to further involve local people on the regeneration of the district, and funded by Hackney Council.

Primary school pupils were joined by judo champ
Lee Shinkin for their walking challenge

Walk on by

PUPILS from local primary schools celebrated International Walk to School Month by taking part in a relay using a real Paralympic torch.

The event saw excited young representatives from each school carry the torch on a 10 mile route across the borough. They were joined by British judo champion, Commonwealth Games medallist, and Rio 2016 Olympic hopeful Lee Shinkin (pictured above).

Starting at Parkwood primary, N4, the torch was passed from school to school, before the relay finished outside Hackney Town Hall on 24 October.

Each school group walked at least two miles, breaking into renditions of Queen's 'We Are The Champions' along the way. The Speaker of Hackney, Cllr Jessica Webb, welcomed the children with drinks and snacks when they arrived at the Town Hall.

Lee said: "I really enjoyed the day, I'm a London lad myself so it was good to chat to the children and give something back."

"I'm normally a car driver, but it was great to walk and see other parts of Hackney"

Salima Abdin, from Jubilee primary, saw her school walk eight miles on the day. She said: "I'm normally a car driver, but it was great to walk and see other parts of Hackney."

And Michelle Parkinson, from Kingsmead primary, added: "The torch made it really special for the pupils – that was amazing."

Walk to School Month encourages families to swap motorised transport for walking every October. Twenty five Hackney schools are taking part in the scheme which rewards pupils who travel sustainably.

Just 9.5 per cent of all Hackney pupils now travel to school by car.

News in brief

Primary school students get a taste of the working world

SEBRIGHT Primary School pupils have been learning about the working world and what certain jobs involve. The 30 five and six-year-olds visited Dalston CLR James Library to explore the skills needed to work there. They were given a tour of the Dalston Lane library on 22 October, checked in books using an automatic scanning machine, and explored Hackney Archives, which keeps local history records. The visit was part of 'Work Week' designed by Inspire!, the borough's education business partnership. Sebright pupils also visited the National Theatre; Geffrye Museum; Shoreditch fire station; Bank of England; and The RE London Shoreditch Hotel during the week.

Plus there were in-school visits from a florist, occupational therapist, and police community support officer. Seventeen other Hackney primary schools are due to hold a Work Week.

Borough pupils to perform at the annual Music Service Gala

SOME of the borough's most gifted pupils will be in the spotlight on 8 November for the borough's annual Music Service Gala at Hackney Empire.

It features performances from secondary and primary school students and this year BBC Young Musician of the Year finalist, recorder player and Stoke Newington resident, Charlotte Barbour-Condini, will also take part. Cllr Rita Krishna, Cabinet Member for Children's Services, said: "These performances will represent a snapshot of the extent and quality of music making taking place across the borough."

The event is organised by Hackney Music Service, part of Hackney Learning Trust. The service runs schools and young people's programmes that include instrumental and vocal lessons, ensembles and choirs, holiday courses and participation in music projects.

Singer Emeli Sandé coaches Hackney schoolchildren

ALTERNATIVE soul singer Emeli Sandé hosted a workshop at the Royal Albert Hall last month to inspire musical young people from Hackney.

Eleven students from Stoke Newington School, and four from The Urswick School, gained insights from the singer, wrote songs with her band, and performed in the iconic London concert hall. The 16 October event was part of a series organised by the Royal Albert Hall to give young Londoners the opportunity to work with cutting edge artists.

Hackney resident Emeli, who performed at the Olympic opening and closing ceremonies, said: "It's really special to have the opportunity to work with children, and I'm sure I'll take as much inspiration from them as I can offer in return."

A HACKNEY-based youth engagement charity has begun selling locally sourced 'grow boxes' at Broadway Market.

Grow SkyWay is a new venture from youth engagement charity SkyWay.

The aim is to develop a financially sustainable programme to train 16 to 25-year-olds in carpentry, gardening, retail and employability skills, while supporting a business which builds and sells grow boxes made from locally sourced, reclaimed scaffold board; the young people also help to grow and sell local produce.

All profits will be reinvested in the venture, so more young people can join the training programme.

The charity began trading for the first time on 27 October.

Gail Mistlin, CEO for SkyWay, who was manning the market stall along with colleague Louise Braithwaite, said:

“People like the grow boxes because they are recycled and good for the environment and good for the environment”

“People like the grow boxes because they are recycled and good for the environment.

“People also like to have a natural source of herbs and other produce within their home and this makes them very appealing.”

Grow SkyWay has both social and environmental aims, including supporting young people from difficult backgrounds and making London a more sustainable city. The charity hopes to promote the development of urban space for food production by encouraging more edible plants to be grown across the capital.

Therapeutic art

A HACKNEY project is being used as an example of how the arts can positively impact on health and social care.

'History in the Making' is a collaborative project that aims to help people recovering from mental health problems, and drug and alcohol addiction.

Devised by artist Tessa Hunkin, the project saw large mosaics installed in Shepherdess Walk, N1, in May this year.

The finished pieces were made up of around 216,000 tiles and took eight months to complete – with a core group of 28 service users and a number of local residents working on the mosaics from a shop in Murray Grove, N1.

Tessa said: "The team worked with such dedication and ability, and I think everyone enjoyed the satisfying process of creating such a large artwork."

The aim of the project, commissioned by the Council and Hackney Drug and Alcohol Action Team (DAAT), is to help participants develop social skills and reduce isolation by working in a calming and therapeutic environment.

Now the National Alliance for Arts, Health and Wellbeing is using the Hackney project as part of a 'growing body of evidence' showing how arts can support patients through illness. It has launched a national campaign 'Arts in Health: Improving Lives' in order to demonstrate how projects like the Shepherdess Walk mosaics help improve healthcare environments and aid people's recovery.

Alex Coulter, chair of the alliance, said: "This campaign is an opportunity to raise awareness of the impact of arts in health projects and to show that they are all connected and part of a movement that is growing all the time, in communities and countries across the world."

News in brief

Free vaccine against whooping cough for pregnant women

PREGNANT women can now get a free vaccine that will protect their baby against whooping cough until they are old enough to be immunised.

Health officials in Hackney are encouraging mothers-to-be to shield their newborn babies from whooping cough by getting vaccinated in the last three months of pregnancy. Women who have the vaccine pass protection on to their babies.

Whooping cough is a bacterial lung infection that can lead to brain damage, pneumonia and even death in babies. The number of people falling victim to the highly contagious disease is increasing, with more than 4,500 cases reported across England and Wales this year; compared to fewer than 500 in 2010. This includes nine deaths of babies too young to have the immunisation, which is available at two months of age.

Dr Lesley Mountford, joint director of Public Health for NHS North East London and the City, said: "If you are pregnant ask your GP, practice nurse, midwife or community pharmacist about how you can get the whooping cough vaccine."

New sickle cell care centre opens at Homerton hospital

HOMERTON hospital has opened a new day care centre for sickle cell and thalassaemia patients.

Sickle cell disease is an inherited red blood cell disorder that mostly affects people of African and Afro-Caribbean heritage, as well as those from Asia, the Middle East and eastern Mediterranean.

Symptoms include liver, kidney, lung, heart and spleen damage causing severe pain. Red blood cells also break up leading to chronic anaemia and tiredness.

The day centre will offer powerful pain relief, oxygen therapy and intravenous therapy. As well as medical and nursing care, the team also offers counselling and psychological support, advice and help about employment and applications for welfare benefits, and assistance with specific housing needs.

Consultant Haematologist, Dr Roger Amos, said: "Sickle cell disease and thalassaemia are common problems in our local community. The new expanded day care facility offers immediate access to expert doctors and nurses, together with all the other innovations.

"These include a psychology and social care liaison service, together with equipment to deliver efficient automated red cell exchange blood transfusions."

United against racism

AT the same time that many of Britain's former colonies were gaining independence, there were major political protests going on in the UK against racism and Oswald Mosley's fascists.

Indeed, many of the local protests were centred around the Dalston area. A search of the newspaper holdings at Hackney Archives reveals a campaign in September 1962 to persuade the Government to pass legislation to make incitement of racial hatred a crime.

The newspapers reported on a march by 300 children from Hackney and Stoke Newington youth clubs, from Ridley Road Market to Admiralty House in Whitehall, to deliver a letter to the Prime Minister on the subject.

The march was organised by David Freeman, manager of the Stamford Hill Boys and Girls' Club.

The children carried banners for the march saying 'Black and White Unite'; 'Free Speech, yes; Fascism, no'; and 'Free Britain from Fascists.'

Mr Freeman said: "This was a spontaneous protest against Fascism by the youth of Hackney, many of whose parents suffered under Nazism in Germany. They do not want to see Fascism again."

One of the local youth clubs that was part of the march was the Victoria Boys and Girls Club, records of which are held by the London Metropolitan Archives. This was a Jewish youth club that later developed into a community centre.

The club aimed to teach the children to be good Jews and good citizens, stressing loyalty to each other, and service to the local community. By 1959, the club had over 750 members.

The march was part of a wider campaign to encourage the Government to introduce legislation to counteract racial hatred. This culminated in the Race Relations Act of 1965, which was the first legislation to address racial discrimination in the UK.

The Act made discrimination on the 'grounds of colour, race, ethnic or national origins' in public places illegal. It also led to the creation of the Race Relations Board in 1966 to hear complaints under the Act. The remit of the Act was later extended to cover employment and housing in 1968.

During the 1970s and 1980s, the fight against racism continued and there are a number of collections at Hackney Archives which document these struggles, such as the records of the Hackney Trades Council and those of the Hackney Peoples Press.

The Council played a role, declaring 1984-85 an 'anti-racist year'. During this time, Dalston Library was renamed after CLR James, the historian, writer, philosopher, Pan-Africanist and cricket enthusiast.

In the same year, the Council adopted an anti-Apartheid Declaration to support the struggle of Black South Africans against the racist regime.

Partly in response to these campaigns, anti-racist legislation was developed and strengthened.

The Race Relations Act 1976 replaced the earlier Act, and saw the creation of the Commission for Racial Equality. This was amended in 2000 to include a statutory duty on public bodies to promote race equality and to demonstrate effective procedures to prevent race discrimination.

The Equality Act of 2010 replaced all previous legislation consolidating discrimination law in the UK.

The Mayor and Councillors

Councillors are elected by Hackney residents and serve for four years. The last borough elections were in May 2010.

Councillors have a range of responsibilities, including helping to oversee the Council and its services.

They hold advice surgeries where residents can meet their local representative and ask them to take up issues that may be of concern.

Generally they can help with Council related matters, but if the issue is the responsibility of another person or organisation, councillors can often point people in the right direction and tell residents who they need to see.

Hackney has 57 councillors representing areas called wards – illustrated in the map opposite.

Late-night Hackney

THE Council is asking residents and businesses to have their say on the impact of late-night entertainment in the borough.

Areas like Shoreditch, Dalston, and Stoke Newington have a vibrant night life, and while this boosts the local economy, attracting visitors and new businesses to the area, it also causes problems for residents, and puts pressure on public services like waste disposal.

The Council's Scrutiny Commission is keen to hear from residents as part of this review, as well as from those who enjoy going out in Hackney at night.

This feedback will form part of the evidence for the commission's work, leading to recommendations about how to improve services.

Complete a survey online at: www.hackney.gov.uk/consultation; request hard copies directly on: 020 8356 3441; or by e-mailing: scrutiny@hackney.gov.uk

Scrutiny commissions investigate issues of local concern, and gather evidence from service providers, residents, and organisations, as well as hearing about other areas of good practice. They are made up of councillors from all political parties. Reviews are evidence-based and non-political.

For more info, visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/scrutiny; or call: 020 8356 3441.

Residents are urged to have their say on late night entertainment
